

Proverbs 8:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

By me kings reign, and princes decree justice.

Analysis

By wisdom kings reign and rulers decree justice. The Hebrew 'malak' (reign/rule) and 'chaqqaq' (decree/inscribe) describe governmental authority. Political power exercised wisely produces just government. Conversely, foolish rulers produce unjust governance. This verse establishes that legitimate political authority derives from wisdom, ultimately from God. Romans 13:1 teaches: 'There is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God.' Righteous governance reflects divine wisdom.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern kings often claimed divine approval or descent. Israel's distinctive teaching was that legitimate authority required moral alignment with Yahweh's wisdom, not merely claimed divine status. Samuel's criticism of Saul, Nathan's confrontation of David, prophets' condemnation of wicked kings - all demonstrated that authority without wisdom forfeits legitimacy. Daniel 2:21 affirms God 'removeth kings, and setteth up kings.'
