

Proverbs 9:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding.

Analysis

---

This verse repeats the fundamental principle from 1:7: 'The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom.' The repetition bookends the opening instructional section (chapters 1-9), reinforcing its foundational importance. 'The knowledge of the holy is understanding' parallels the first phrase: knowing God (the Holy One) constitutes true understanding. This verse establishes that genuine wisdom and understanding are impossible apart from relationship with God. All knowledge pursued independently from the fear of Yahweh becomes futile. This principle undergirds Christian education and epistemology.

Historical Context

The structural placement of this verse at the end of Proverbs 1-9 creates an inclusio (literary bookend) with 1:7, framing the entire instructional section with this foundational truth. Ancient Hebrew pedagogy relied on repetition and memorization, making such structural markers pedagogically significant for transmission across generations.
