

Psalm 103:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The LORD is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.

Analysis

This verse quotes God's self-revelation to Moses (Exod 34:6-7), central to Israel's understanding of God's character. 'Merciful' (rachum) and 'gracious' (channun) emphasize God's compassion. 'Slow to anger' (erek appayim, literally 'long of nostrils') and 'plenteous in mercy' (rab chesed) demonstrate patience and abundant covenant love. These attributes ground all theology—God's essence is gracious love, not vindictive judgment. Christ perfectly embodies these attributes, demonstrating God's character in human form.

Historical Context

This formula recurs throughout the Old Testament (Num 14:18, Neh 9:17, Ps 86:15, 145:8, Joel 2:13) as Israel's core confession of God's character. The context in Exodus 34 followed Israel's golden calf apostasy, emphasizing God's grace toward sinners.
