

Psalm 104:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.

Analysis

God set a boundary (gebul) that waters cannot pass, preventing another flood covering the earth. This recalls God's covenant promise to Noah (Gen 9:11-15). God's restraint of waters demonstrates His faithfulness and protective boundaries in creation. The sea's limits illustrate divine sovereignty—even chaotic forces obey appointed boundaries. Job 38:8-11 similarly describes God setting bars and doors for the sea. This provides assurance that God controls potentially destructive forces. Christ's authority over the sea fulfills this divine prerogative.

Historical Context

After the flood, God promised never again to destroy the earth with water. This boundary set for waters represents a fundamental covenant commitment, observable in creation's ongoing stability.
