

Psalms 106:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red sea.

Analysis

---

This verse continues cataloging God's works that Israel forgot (from verse 21). 'Wondrous works in the land of Ham' refers to the ten plagues in Egypt. 'Ham' was Noah's son and ancestor of Egyptians through his son Mizraim (Genesis 10:6). 'Terrible things by the Red sea' uses yare (יָרָא), meaning awesome, fearful, or terror-inducing deeds—the splitting of the sea and drowning of Pharaoh's army. The term 'terrible' emphasizes that God's works inspire reverent fear. These events should have produced permanent awe and faithfulness, yet Israel forgot within weeks. This demonstrates that natural human response to God's works is forgetfulness and ingratitude, not enduring worship.

Historical Context

The 'terrible things' at the Red Sea (Exodus 14) became Israel's central deliverance narrative, celebrated in the Song of the Sea (Exodus 15) and memorialized in annual festivals. Yet the generation that witnessed it died in the wilderness due to unbelief (Numbers 14:29-33). God's most awesome acts cannot overcome human hardness of heart apart from regenerating grace. This historical lesson warns every generation against presuming that past spiritual experiences guarantee present faithfulness.
