

Psalm 107:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let the redeemed of the LORD say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy;

Analysis

This verse specifies who should give thanks. 'Let the redeemed of the LORD say so' identifies thanksgiving as the responsibility of those who've experienced redemption. 'Redeemed' (gahal, גָּהֹל) means those bought back or rescued by a kinsman-redeemer. 'Say so' means declare it, testify publicly. Redemption demands testimony—experiencing God's deliverance obligates proclamation. 'Whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy' specifies rescue from hostile power. This applies immediately to Israel redeemed from Egypt and Babylon, and ultimately to all believers redeemed from sin and Satan through Christ. Silence about redemption is ingratitude; redeemed people must speak.

Historical Context

For Israelites returning from Babylonian exile, 'redemption from the enemy' meant release from captivity after 70 years. Cyrus's decree (Ezra 1) enabling return was God's redemption. Returning exiles were called to testify to God's faithfulness, encouraging those who remained scattered. In the exodus context, redemption from Egypt established the pattern: God delivers His people from enemies. Christians continue this testimony, declaring redemption from sin through Christ.
