

Psalms 107:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Oh that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

Analysis

This is the psalm's first refrain (repeated in vv. 15, 21, 31). 'Oh that men would praise the LORD for his goodness' is both wish and exhortation—expressing desire that people would respond appropriately to God's goodness. 'Praise' (yadah, יָדָה) means to give thanks, confess, acknowledge. 'For his goodness' points to God's character as motivation. 'And for his wonderful works to the children of men' adds God's deeds toward humanity. The refrain emphasizes that God's redemptive acts toward humanity deserve public thanksgiving. The 'Oh that' suggests that proper praise is rare—most don't adequately thank God despite His goodness and works. This rebukes human ingratitude.

Historical Context

Each occurrence of this refrain follows a deliverance scenario, calling for appropriate response. Throughout Scripture, God's mighty acts are meant to evoke worship (Exodus 15; Judges 5; 2 Samuel 22). Yet humans characteristically fail to thank God adequately (Luke 17:17-18). The psalm's repeated refrain hammers home that experiencing God's deliverance demands thanksgiving, which many neglect.
