

Psalms 108:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Awake, psaltery and harp: I myself will awake early.

Analysis

Awake, psaltery and harp (עוֹרָה הַנֶּבֶל וְכִנּוֹר, urah hanevel vekinnor)—David personifies his instruments, commanding them to 'wake up.' Urah (awake!) is urgent summons. The nevel (psaltery, a larger stringed instrument) and kinnor (lyre) were David's worship tools.

I myself will awake early (אֶעֱיִרָה שַׁחַר, a'irah shakhar)—literally 'I will awaken the dawn.' David vows to wake before sunrise to praise God. Shakhar (dawn) is personified like the instruments. The meaning: David's worship will be so early, so eager, that he'll wake the dawn itself rather than the dawn waking him.

This verse captures passionate priority in worship. David doesn't fit God into his schedule—he reorders his entire day around praise. The New Testament pattern continues: Jesus rose 'a great while before day' to pray (Mark 1:35), modeling worship as first priority, not afterthought.

Historical Context

Psalms 108 is a composite, combining Psalm 57:7-11 (confidence amid enemies) and Psalm 60:5-12 (prayer for victory). David likely compiled it for specific liturgical use, possibly before battle. The 'awake early' suggests pre-dawn military preparation.

Study Questions

1. What would it look like to 'awaken the dawn' with worship—to make God your first thought, not an afterthought?
2. How does the urgency in David's 'Awake!' challenge casual approaches to worship?
3. What 'instruments' (gifts, time, energy) lie dormant in your life that God is calling you to 'awaken' for His glory?
