

Psalms 112:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

Analysis

This verse addresses fear and faith: 'He shall not be afraid of evil tidings.' 'Evil tidings' (shemu'ah ra'ah) means bad news, reports of danger, or threatening circumstances. The promise isn't absence of evil news but absence of paralyzing fear in response to it. The second clause explains the source of this courage: 'his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.' 'Fixed' (nakown) means established, steadfast, stable - the same word from Psalm 108:1. The heart's stability comes from 'trusting in the LORD.' Trust (batach) means confident reliance, security in God's character and promises. A heart fixed on God remains stable regardless of external circumstances. This verse presents the antidote to fear: not the absence of threats but the presence of trust. It establishes that courage isn't natural temperament but theological conviction - those who truly know God's character need not be controlled by fear of circumstances.

Historical Context

In the ancient world, 'evil tidings' might include reports of approaching armies, famine, plague, or personal disaster. Israel's history was marked by such threats - Egyptian pursuit, Canaanite armies, Philistine invasions, Assyrian and Babylonian threats. The righteous person's response was tested repeatedly. This verse echoes Isaiah's counsel to Ahaz when facing Syrian and Ephraimite invasion: 'Take heed, and be quiet; fear not' (Isaiah 7:4). The stability of a 'fixed heart' contrasts with the anxious heart that wavers with every report. For exilic Jews, evil tidings were constant - destruction, captivity, oppression. Yet prophets like Daniel maintained fixed hearts through trust in God. New Testament teaching continues this theme: 'Be careful for nothing' (Philippians 4:6), 'casting all your care upon him' (1 Peter 5:7). The early church faced constant evil tidings - persecution, martyrdom - yet testimonies speak of believers facing death without fear. This verse has sustained martyrs, missionaries, and everyday believers facing life's uncertainties.
