

Psalms 116:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I said in my haste, All men are liars.

Analysis

I said in my haste, All men are liars. This verse admits a faith crisis—despairing words spoken in panic. I said in my haste (ani amarti vechofzi, אֲנִי אָמַרְתִּי בְחֶפְזִי) uses chafaz (חֶפֶז), meaning haste, alarm, panic. In terrified extremity, the psalmist spoke rashly, declaring all men are liars (kol-haadam kozev, כָּל-הָאָדָם לֹא-אֱמָרָה).

Was this assessment accurate or faithless? Both. Humans are indeed unreliable—promises broken, help withheld, friends abandoning. Paul quotes this via Psalm 116 in Romans 3:4: 'Let God be true, but every man a liar.' Human unfaithfulness highlights divine faithfulness. Yet saying this 'in haste' suggests it was spoken as despairing complaint rather than theological truth.

The verse's honesty is striking. Scripture records faith's wobbles, not just triumphs. Abraham laughed in unbelief (Genesis 17:17), Moses struck the rock in anger (Numbers 20:11), Elijah despaired (1 Kings 19:4). Yet these were believers whose momentary failures didn't nullify covenant relationship. The psalm includes this confession to show that faith isn't absence of doubt but perseverance despite it.

Historical Context

The phrase 'all men are liars' reflects disillusionment with human help. Perhaps the psalmist experienced betrayal during the crisis described in verses 3-4. David knew betrayal intimately—Saul's murderous pursuit, Absalom's rebellion, Ahithophel's treachery (2 Samuel 15-17). Learning that human help is unreliable drives believers to God, the only truly faithful one. Paul's use in Romans 3:4 makes this a universal truth: human unfaithfulness serves as dark background highlighting God's bright faithfulness. Even our failures magnify His reliability.
