

Psalm 118:29

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

Analysis

O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good (הָדוּ לְיהוָה כִּיטָּב, hodu la-YHWH ki-tov)—Yadah means give thanks, praise; tov means good, pleasant, beneficial. For his mercy endureth for ever (כִּי לְעוֹלָם חֶסֶד, ki le-olam chasdo)—Chesed means steadfast love, covenant loyalty, mercy; olam means forever, eternity.

Psalm 118 begins (v. 1) and ends (v. 29) with identical words, forming an inclusio—a literary envelope. This refrain appears repeatedly in Scripture (Psalm 106:1, 107:1, 136:1, 1 Chronicles 16:34, 2 Chronicles 5:13, Ezra 3:11). It's Israel's foundational confession: God's character is good, and his covenant love never fails. Despite circumstances, this remains true. The repetition teaches us to begin and end with gratitude grounded in God's unchanging nature.

Historical Context

This refrain was sung antiphonally—one group singing the call ("give thanks"), another the response ("for his mercy endures forever"). It accompanied ark processions, temple dedications, and festival worship. When exiles returned, they sang this refrain while laying the temple foundation (Ezra 3:10-11), weeping and shouting simultaneously.
