

Psalms 119:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth.

Analysis

With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth. The psalmist moves from learning to proclaiming. With my lips (bisfatai, בִּשְׂפָתַי) emphasizes verbal testimony—faith is not kept private but expressed publicly. Declared (sippiarti, סִפַּרְתִּי) means to recount, narrate, or announce, suggesting detailed testimony rather than vague platitudes. The object is all the judgments of thy mouth (kol-mishpatei pikkha, כָּל־מִשְׁפָּטֵי פִיךָ), God's revealed judicial decisions and moral verdicts.

The phrase judgments of thy mouth personalizes divine revelation—these are not abstract principles but words that proceed from God's own mouth, carrying His authority and character. The comprehensiveness (all) indicates the psalmist holds nothing back, declaring both comfortable and challenging truths. This anticipates the New Testament pattern where those who believe with the heart confess with the mouth (Romans 10:9-10), and Jesus' expectation that His disciples would openly acknowledge Him (Matthew 10:32).

Historical Context

In ancient Israel, oral tradition and verbal testimony were central to faith transmission. The Shema commanded parents to teach God's words to their children through constant verbal repetition (Deuteronomy 6:7). Public recitation of God's laws occurred at feast gatherings (Deuteronomy 31:11-13). This verse reflects that culture of verbal proclamation, where truth was embodied in speech, not merely preserved in writing.

Study Questions

1. How comfortable are you with verbally declaring God's judgments, especially those that contradict contemporary culture?
2. What proportion of God's 'judgments' do you regularly declare—are there truths you avoid mentioning?
3. How can you cultivate the habit of speaking about God's Word in everyday conversations, not just formal religious settings?
