

Psalms 119:169

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let my cry come near before thee, O LORD: give me understanding according to thy word.

Analysis

Let my cry come near before thee, O LORD (תִּקְרַב רִנָּתִי לִפְנֵיךָ יְהוָה, tiqrav rinnati lefanekha YHWH)—The Taw (ת) section, final stanza, opens with urgent petition. Qarav means 'come near, approach, draw close'—often used of priestly access to God (Leviticus 21:21). Rinnah can mean 'cry, shout, song'—desperate appeal or joyful worship. The request: give me understanding according to thy word (כִּדְבָרְךָ הַבִּינֵנִי, kid'varekha havineni). Bin means 'discern, perceive, understand with insight.' Understanding flows from the Word itself.

James 1:5 echoes this: 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God.' Christ grants the Spirit to illumine Scripture (John 16:13).

Historical Context

The image of the cry 'coming near' reflects temple worship, where prayers ascended like incense (Psalm 141:2; Revelation 8:3-4). The final section returns to the psalm's opening themes—seeking understanding (v. 169 echoes v. 34, 73, 125, 144) and divine instruction. The acrostic ends where it began: with God's Word as source of comprehension.

Study Questions

1. What does it mean to ask for your prayer to 'come near' God rather than just asking God to answer?
2. How does understanding 'according to' (kid'varekha) God's Word differ from human wisdom or intuition?
3. In what specific area of confusion do you need to pray for God-given understanding rooted in Scripture?
