

Psalms 119:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times.

Analysis

My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times. This verse expresses intense spiritual hunger. My soul breaketh (garsah nafshi, גַּרְסָה נַפְשִׁי) uses a verb meaning to crush, break, or shatter—depicting overwhelming, almost painful desire. The psalmist's innermost being (nephesh, נֶפֶשׁ) is consumed with longing (ta'avah, תָּאַבָּה), a word often describing craving or intense yearning. This is not casual interest but desperate hunger for God's judgments (mishpatekha, מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ), His authoritative decisions and moral verdicts.

The phrase at all times (bekhol-et, בְּכָל-עֵת) indicates constant, unrelenting desire—not intermittent interest but continuous craving. This echoes Jesus' beatitude: 'Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness' (Matthew 5:6). Such intense spiritual appetite is evidence of new birth; the unregenerate neither desire nor delight in God's law (Romans 8:7). As newborn babies crave milk, so believers should crave spiritual food (1 Peter 2:2).

Historical Context

The psalmist's language of soul-crushing longing stands in stark contrast to Israel's repeated pattern of despising God's Word (Numbers 15:31, 2 Samuel 12:9). The remnant who truly treasured God's law experienced this consuming hunger, especially during periods when God's Word was rare (1 Samuel 3:1) or when persecution made accessing Scripture dangerous. This verse reflects the heart of those who valued God's revelation above life itself.
