

Psalms 119:66

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Teach me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

Analysis

Teach me good judgment and knowledge (תּוֹב טָעם יְדַעַת לְמִדְנִי)—The psalmist requests taam (literally "taste," meaning discernment or good sense) and daat (intimate, experiential knowledge). This isn't mere intellectual information but the ability to rightly apply God's truth. The Hebrew taam suggests savoring wisdom like fine food, distinguishing good from evil through refined spiritual palate.

For I have believed thy commandments (כִּי בְּמִצְוֹתֶיךָ הָאָמַנָּתִי)—The psalmist's request flows from prior faith (he'emanti, perfect tense indicating settled conviction). He doesn't seek knowledge as a skeptic demanding proof, but as a committed disciple wanting deeper understanding. Faith precedes understanding; trust in God's commands creates the foundation for mature discernment.

Historical Context

Psalm 119, the longest chapter in Scripture (176 verses), is an elaborate acrostic poem where each 8-verse section begins with successive Hebrew letters. Written likely during the exile or post-exilic period, it reflects Israel's renewed appreciation for Torah after experiencing the consequences of disobedience. Every verse (except one) references God's word using synonyms: law, testimonies, precepts, statutes, commandments, judgments, word, saying.
