

Psalms 119:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I will keep thy statutes: O forsake me not utterly.

Analysis

I will keep thy statutes: O forsake me not utterly. The final verse of the Beth (ב) stanza pairs resolute obedience with desperate dependence. I will keep (eshmor, אֶשְׁמֹר) means to guard, observe, protect—implying vigilant, active commitment to God's statutes (chuqqekha, חֻקֶּיךָ), the divinely prescribed ordinances. Yet this vow is immediately followed by the plea forsake me not utterly (al-ta'azveni ad-me'od, אַל-תֵּעָזְבֵנִי עַד-מְאֹד), acknowledging that perseverance in obedience requires divine enablement.

This verse captures the paradox of sanctification: believers are commanded to obey while simultaneously recognizing their utter dependence on God's sustaining grace. The psalmist knows that without God's presence and help, even the firmest resolve will crumble. Paul would later express this same tension: 'work out your salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who works in you' (Philippians 2:12-13).

Historical Context

The fear of divine abandonment pervades the Psalms, reflecting Israel's covenant theology. God's presence was the essence of covenant blessing (Exodus 33:15-16), while His absence meant judgment and disaster. The exile had demonstrated the catastrophic consequences of God's departure from His people. This verse's plea resonates with Moses' desperate prayer in Exodus 33:15: 'If Your presence does not go with us, do not bring us up from here.'
