

Psalms 132:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

We will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.

Analysis

A call to worship follows the discovery: 'We will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.' The plural 'we' emphasizes corporate action - not individual but communal worship. The phrase 'go into his tabernacles' (plural mishkenot) suggests entering God's dwelling place(s) - possibly the multiple chambers of the future temple or the ark's tabernacle David prepared. 'We will worship' (Hebrew 'shacha') means to bow down, prostrate oneself in reverence. The location 'at his footstool' refers to the ark, specifically the mercy seat where God's presence dwelt between cherubim (1 Chronicles 28:2; Psalm 99:5). The footstool image suggests God's throne in heaven, with earth/ark as His footstool (Isaiah 66:1). Worshiping at His footstool combines reverence (bowing at feet) with access (permitted to approach). This verse celebrates restored worship now that the ark is recovered.

Historical Context

David's bringing the ark to Jerusalem restored centralized worship. The second (successful) attempt involved proper procedures, Levitical carrying, sacrifices, and great celebration (2 Samuel 6:12-19). The ark became focal point for worship until temple was built. The language anticipates Solomon's temple where God's glory would dwell and worshipers would bow before His presence.
