

Psalms 135:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Whatsoever the LORD pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places.

Analysis

Divine sovereignty receives magnificent expression: 'Whatsoever the LORD pleased, that did he.' The Hebrew construction 'kol asher chaphets' emphasizes comprehensive, unhindered will - God does all His pleasure. This is not arbitrary power but purposeful sovereignty guided by infinite wisdom. The fourfold domain - heaven, earth, seas, and deep places - encompasses the entire created order. 'Deep places' (tehomot) recalls Genesis 1:2 and the primordial waters, suggesting God's authority extends even to mysterious, chaotic realms. No sphere of existence lies outside His control. This verse anticipates Ephesians 1:11, where God 'worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.' For the believer, divine sovereignty is not threatening but comforting - the God who rules all things is the same God who chose us as His treasure.

Historical Context

Ancient cosmology viewed the 'deep places' as mysterious, often threatening realms associated with chaos and sea monsters. Canaanite mythology depicted cosmic battles between deities and sea forces. Israel's faith radically reinterpreted this: Yahweh created and controls these realms effortlessly, without struggle or opposition.
