

Psalms 137:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.

Analysis

By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept (על נהרות בבל שם) (יִשְׁבּוּנוּ גַם-בְּכִינוּ)—Geography becomes theology. The exiles sit by Babylon's irrigation canals (neharot)—life-giving waters in a foreign land that mock their thirst for Zion. Yashavnu (we sat) suggests defeated posture, not resting but mourning. Bakhinu (we wept) is collective lament. When we remembered Zion (בְּזָכְרֵנוּ אֶת־צִיּוֹן)—memory intensifies grief.

This inaugurates Scripture's most anguished lament. The 70-year exile (Jeremiah 29:10) stripped Israel of land, temple, and worship—the covenant's visible expressions. Yet weeping by foreign rivers kept covenant memory alive. Jesus wept over Jerusalem (Luke 19:41), and believers groan for the New Jerusalem (Revelation 21:4).

Historical Context

Written during or shortly after the Babylonian exile (586-516 BC), this psalm captures the trauma of Jerusalem's destruction, temple desecration, forced deportation, and cultural erasure. Nebuchadnezzar's conquest fulfilled prophetic warnings but felt like covenant collapse.
