

Psalm 18:42

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then did I beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

Analysis

David beat enemies 'fine as dust before the wind,' casting them out like 'street mud.' The Hebrew 'shachaq' (beat fine) and 'riq' (pour out/empty) portray complete destruction and humiliation. Dust and mud imagery indicates utter defeat and contempt. This harsh language reflects ancient warfare's brutality and God's judgment. It anticipates Revelation's imagery of Christ treading the winepress of God's wrath (Revelation 19:15).

Historical Context

Ancient victory language where defeated enemies were trampled and left as refuse in streets—imagery that modern readers find jarring but was standard in ancient Near Eastern conquest accounts.
