

Psalm 19:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.

Analysis

Creation's speech has 'no speech' and 'no words,' their voice 'not heard.' This paradox indicates non-verbal communication—creation testifies without audible language yet communicates clearly. The revelation is universal, transcending language barriers. This demonstrates that God's existence and attributes are evident to all people in all cultures (Romans 1:20), leaving humanity without excuse for unbelief.

Historical Context

Written in context where multiple languages and nations existed, yet all could perceive creation's testimony regardless of linguistic differences.
