

Psalms 2:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

Analysis

After depicting inevitable judgment, the psalmist issues a gracious warning to rulers: there is still time to repent and submit. The Hebrew 'sakal' (be wise) implies not mere intellectual knowledge but practical application of truth. 'Be instructed' (yasar) carries the sense of receiving discipline or correction. This verse demonstrates God's redemptive heart even toward His enemies - judgment is always His strange work (Isaiah 28:21), preceded by calls to repentance. True wisdom begins with the fear of the Lord (Proverbs 9:10).

Historical Context

In David's time, this served as both warning and invitation to neighboring kings to submit to Israel's God. The prophets later expanded this theme, calling all nations to acknowledge Yahweh. Paul echoes this in Romans 2:4, noting that God's kindness is meant to lead to repentance.
