

Psalm 2:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure.

Analysis

Divine wrath follows divine laughter - God's patience has limits. The Hebrew 'aph' (wrath) and 'charon' (sore displeasure) are strong covenant terms, indicating not arbitrary anger but righteous judicial response to covenant violation. God's speaking 'in his wrath' reminds us that judgment is not merely punitive but declarative - God pronounces what is already true about rebellious hearts. This verse should drive sinners to Christ, our only refuge from the wrath to come (1 Thessalonians 1:10).

Historical Context

This verse reflects ancient Near Eastern treaty language where suzerains would warn vassal nations of consequences for rebellion. In Israel's context, it assured God's people that their enemies would face divine judgment. The early church saw this fulfilled when Jerusalem fell in 70 AD and continues to await final eschatological fulfillment.

Study Questions

1. How does the reality of God's wrath against sin deepen your appreciation for Christ's atoning sacrifice?
2. Do you take God's patience as an opportunity for repentance or as permission to continue in sin?
