

Psalm 22:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Deliver my soul from the sword; my darling from the power of the dog.

Analysis

The prayer for deliverance from 'the sword' and 'the dog' uses metaphors for violent death and contemptuous enemies. 'My darling' (Hebrew: yachid, 'my only one') likely refers to the psalmist's own life or soul—his singular, precious existence. For Christ, this may refer to His unique, divine-human person. Reformed theology emphasizes that God answered this prayer through resurrection, delivering Christ's soul from death and granting Him eternal life to share with His people.

Historical Context

Dogs in ancient Israel were scavengers, not pets—symbols of contempt and danger. The 'sword' represents violent death. Together, these images depict mortal peril from which only God can rescue.
