

Psalms 22:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For he hath not despised nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted; neither hath he hid his face from him; but when he cried unto him, he heard.

Analysis

God did not 'despise nor abhor the affliction of the afflicted'—a profound statement of divine compassion toward suffering. Though God ordained Christ's suffering, He did not delight in it for its own sake but for redemption's sake (Isa. 53:10). 'Neither hath he hid his face from him' contradicts the earlier cry of forsakenness (v.1), showing that apparent divine absence was temporary and purposeful. Reformed theology sees God's sovereign orchestration: He hid His face momentarily to accomplish salvation, then restored fellowship eternally.

Historical Context

This verse assures suffering saints that God sees, cares, and hears their cries. Throughout Israel's history—exile, oppression, persecution—this promise sustained faith that God had not permanently abandoned His people despite temporary discipline.
