

Psalms 22:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For the kingdom is the LORD'S: and he is the governor among the nations.

Analysis

The theological foundation for universal worship is stated: 'the kingdom is the LORD's: and he is the governor among the nations.' God's sovereignty over all nations justifies His claim to universal worship. Reformed theology emphasizes that God's kingship is not potential but actual—He reigns now over all peoples, whether they acknowledge it or not. Christ's death and resurrection established this kingdom publicly (Col. 2:15), and history unfolds according to God's sovereign decree.

Historical Context

In ancient Near East, gods were viewed as territorial—limited to specific nations or regions. This verse asserts Yahweh's unique, universal sovereignty. Israel's monotheism and missionary consciousness stemmed from this conviction that their God ruled all nations.
