

Psalms 25:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

O my God, I trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me.

Analysis

The prayer 'O my God, I trust in thee: let me not be ashamed' expresses covenant confidence. The fear of being 'ashamed' (Hebrew: bosh) means being put to shame, disappointed, or abandoned. Trusting God's character, the psalmist pleads for vindication. Reformed theology emphasizes that those who genuinely trust God will never ultimately be put to shame (Rom. 10:11). Temporary trials may bring temporary shame, but final vindication awaits all believers. The plea that 'mine enemies triumph not over me' recognizes spiritual warfare requiring divine intervention.

Historical Context

In honor-shame cultures, public disgrace was worse than death. David, anointed yet persecuted, faced constant threats to his reputation and life. This prayer for preservation of honor anticipates Christ, who endured shame to remove our shame (Heb. 12:2).
