

Psalms 30:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

Analysis

The confession 'And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved' acknowledges past presumption. Prosperity bred false security—forgetting dependence on God. This warns against assuming favorable circumstances will continue without divine preservation. Reformed theology emphasizes total dependence—even in prosperity, believers rely on God's sustaining grace. Comfort can lead to spiritual complacency, requiring divine discipline to restore proper dependence.

Historical Context

Israel's history showed repeated cycles: prosperity led to forgetting God, which led to judgment, which led to repentance, which led to deliverance, which led to prosperity again. David personally experienced this pattern.
