

Psalms 35:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

Analysis

These imprecatory elements reflect judicial language where the psalmist appeals to God as righteous judge rather than taking personal vengeance. The Hebrew 'bosh' (confounded) and 'chapher' (put to shame) indicate divine justice exposing and overturning evil schemes. This aligns with Romans 12:19's command to leave vengeance to God, showing that imprecatory psalms model godly restraint—bringing grievances to the divine court rather than executing personal retribution.

Historical Context

Ancient Israelite culture understood shame as a public consequence of sin and defeat. David, as anointed king under covenant, could legitimately pray for God's judgment on those opposing God's chosen ruler and therefore God Himself.
