

Psalms 36:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

Analysis

The 'foot of pride' personifies arrogant opposition coming to trample the righteous. Pride was considered the foundational sin (Proverbs 16:18), producing all other evils. The parallel 'hand of the wicked' suggests active persecution—foot for approaching, hand for removing or harming. David's prayer acknowledges vulnerability and dependence on God's protection against forces that would displace him from secure standing. Pride and wickedness work together to oppose God's people, requiring divine intervention for safety.

Historical Context

Ancient warfare involved literal trampling of defeated enemies and forcible removal from land or position. David's language reflects real threats he faced from proud adversaries like Saul and Absalom.
