

Psalms 37:21

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

Analysis

The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again (רָשָׁע לֹוֶה וְלֹא יִשְׁלֵם, rasha loveh v'lo yeshalem)—the Hebrew captures persistent dishonesty: borrowing with no intent to repay reflects covenant-breaking character. In contrast, the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth (צַדִּיק חֹנֵן וְנוֹתֵן, tsaddiq chonen v'noten)—the righteous demonstrates chen (grace/favor) through generosity. This verse exposes economic ethics as spiritual fruit: wickedness exploits relationships for selfish gain, while righteousness creates a culture of grace. Paul's command "owe no man any thing, but to love one another" (Romans 13:8) echoes this principle.

The contrast isn't merely financial but reflects heart orientation: the wicked takes and hoards, the righteous blesses and shares. This verse demolishes any notion that material success indicates divine favor—generosity, not accumulation, marks God's people.

Historical Context

Written during Israel's monarchy (likely David's later years), when economic disparity and debt slavery were pressing issues. The Torah's sabbatical year provisions (Deuteronomy 15:1-11) provided institutional release from debt, making failure to repay a willful moral choice, not merely economic hardship.
