

Psalm 37:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the LORD upholdeth him with his hand.

Analysis

Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down (כִּי־יַפֵּל לֹא־יַיָּצֵל), ki-yipol lo-yatal—the verb yatal (cast headlong) carries violent imagery of being hurled down beyond recovery. The righteous naphal (fall/stumble) but isn't shalak (cast away).

For the LORD upholdeth him with his hand (כִּי־יְהִיָּתָה סֹמֵךְ יְדוֹ), ki-YHWH somekh yado)—samak (uphold/sustain/support) appears as a participle, indicating continuous action. God's hand perpetually steadies His people.

This verse addresses the Prosperity Gospel heresy: righteousness doesn't prevent falling but ensures restoration. Proverbs 24:16 echoes this: "A just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again." Jude 24 promises Jesus keeps us from falling, while this verse assures that when we do fall (through weakness, not willful sin), God lifts us up.

Historical Context

David knew repeated failure: adultery with Bathsheba, numbering Israel, family dysfunction. Yet God sustained him through repentance. This verse reflects mature faith that distinguishes stumbling from apostasy, understanding God's grace sustains through moral failure when we return to Him.
