

Psalm 44:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.

Analysis

The remarkable claim: 'All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.' Despite overwhelming suffering, the community maintains covenant loyalty. They have neither forgotten God (mental abandonment) nor violated covenant terms (behavioral abandonment). This creates the theological crisis.

Historical Context

The psalmist echoes Job's protest--suffering has come despite faithfulness. This challenges retribution theology that assumes suffering proves sin, forcing deeper theological reflection.
