

Psalms 46:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea;

Analysis

The bold declaration: 'Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea.' The most stable elements of creation--earth and mountains--are imagined shaking and dissolving. Yet because God is our refuge, even cosmic upheaval cannot produce fear.

Historical Context

Earthquakes were known in ancient Palestine, making this imagery concrete rather than merely poetic. Mountains 'carried into the sea' represents the most extreme imaginable catastrophe--creation itself coming undone.
