

Psalm 50:21

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

Analysis

God's patience misinterpreted: 'These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself.' Divine patience is mistaken for indifference or approval. The wicked project their own character onto God, assuming He shares their tolerance for sin. But silence is not endorsement.

Historical Context

This verse anticipates Romans 2:4, where Paul warns that God's kindness intends repentance, not continued sin. Misreading divine patience leads to judgment.
