

Psalms 64:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

They encourage themselves in an evil matter: they commune of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them?

Analysis

The wicked encouraging 'themselves in an evil matter' reveals conspiracy's self-reinforcing nature. 'Commune of laying snares privily' indicates shared plotting. Their question 'Who shall see them?' demonstrates practical atheism—assuming no divine accountability. This hubris anticipates the fool's claim 'There is no God' (Psalm 14:1).

Historical Context

The secret plotting recalls Absalom's conspiracy where he 'stole the hearts' of Israel (2 Samuel 15:6) through private conversations undermining David. Such covert operations depend on assuming God doesn't observe.

Study Questions

1. How does the wicked's mutual encouragement in evil parallel or parody believers' mutual encouragement in good?
2. What does the assumption 'Who shall see?' reveal about the importance of God's omniscience?
