

Psalms 66:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Which holdeth our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved.

Analysis

God 'holdeth our soul in life' expresses His active, sustaining providence—believers live not by their own strength but by God's preserving grace (Acts 17:28). The phrase 'suffereth not our feet to be moved' echoes Psalm 121:3, promising divine protection from fatal stumbling. This is not a guarantee against all trials, but assurance that God will preserve His elect unto final salvation, preventing apostasy and ultimate destruction.

Historical Context

This confidence in preservation reflects Israel's covenant relationship with Yahweh, who promised to keep His people despite their faithlessness. It anticipates the New Covenant promise that God will guard believers by His power through faith (1 Peter 1:5).

Study Questions

1. How does understanding that God actively holds your soul in life change your perspective on daily challenges?
2. What does it mean practically that your feet cannot be moved by God's sovereign protection?
3. How does this promise of preservation relate to the doctrine of eternal security and perseverance of the saints?
