

Psalms 67:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.
Selah.

Analysis

The call for nations to 'be glad and sing for joy' grounds joy in God's character as righteous judge and shepherd. 'Thou shalt judge the people righteously' promises impartial justice—God shows no favoritism based on nationality, wealth, or status (Deuteronomy 10:17). 'Govern the nations upon earth' asserts God's sovereign rule over all political powers. This provides comfort to the oppressed and warning to oppressors: ultimate justice comes from God's throne, not human courts.

Historical Context

Written when Israel often suffered under unjust foreign powers, this psalm affirms that God's righteous governance supersedes all earthly authorities. His judgment is both present (providential guidance) and future (final assize).
