

Psalms 73:18

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Surely thou didst set them in slippery places: thou castedst them down into destruction.

Analysis

After gaining God's perspective, the psalmist recognizes: 'Surely thou didst set them in slippery places; thou castedst them down into destruction.' The wicked's prosperity is precarious—slippery footing before inevitable fall. God sovereignly positions them for judgment; their destruction isn't accidental but divinely ordained. This echoes Proverbs 16:18—pride precedes destruction. What looked like stable prosperity was actually dangerous positioning before catastrophic fall. Eternal perspective reveals temporal success's true fragility.

Historical Context

Throughout biblical history, proud nations and individuals experienced sudden collapse—Babylon, Assyria, Pharaoh, Herod. Their apparent invincibility proved illusory when God's judgment came. History validates this psalm's insight.
