

Psalm 74:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The day is thine, the night also is thine: thou hast prepared the light and the sun.

Analysis

The psalm appeals to God's sovereignty over creation: "The day is thine, the night also is thine: thou hast prepared the light and the sun" (Hebrew l-kha yom af-l-kha layelah atah hakhino ma-or vashemesh). The repetition "thine...thine" emphasizes God's absolute ownership of time and cosmic order. "Prepared" (Hebrew kun) indicates purposeful establishment. The verse argues from creation to providence: if God sovereignly established the cosmos, He can surely deliver His people. This grounds petition in theology—God's creative power guarantees His redemptive ability.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern paganism assigned different deities to day and night, sun and moon. This verse proclaims the one God rules all creation without rival. The argument from creation to redemption appears throughout Scripture: God who spoke worlds into existence can certainly save (Isaiah 40:26-31, Romans 4:17). The verse echoes Genesis 1:14-18 where God appointed celestial lights.
