

Psalms 75:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

When I shall receive the congregation I will judge uprightly.

Analysis

God speaks in first person: "When I shall receive the congregation I will judge uprightly" (Hebrew ki eqqach mo-ed ani meysarim eshpot). "Receive the congregation" can mean "appoint the set time"—God sovereignly determines when judgment occurs. "Judge uprightly" (Hebrew meysarim eshpot) emphasizes perfect justice. The verse teaches divine patience: God delays judgment not from weakness but purposeful timing (2 Peter 3:9). When the appointed time arrives, judgment will be perfectly righteous.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern justice was notoriously corrupt—bribery, favoritism, and partiality pervaded courts. Even Israel's judges often failed (1 Samuel 8:3, Amos 5:12). This verse promises that God's judgment is absolutely impartial and just. The "set time" recalls appointed feasts (Hebrew mo-ed) and prophetic fulfillment (Daniel 9:24-27, Galatians 4:4, "fullness of time").

Study Questions

1. How does understanding that God has an "appointed time" for judgment affect your response to present injustice?
2. What does it mean that God's judgment will be "upright"—perfectly just without partiality or error?
3. How does Christ's return as Judge at the appointed time (Acts 17:31) fulfill this promise?
