

Psalm 77:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Will the Lord cast off for ever? and will he be favourable no more?

Analysis

Will the Lord cast off for ever? (בְּלֹא-זָנָח יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִים). Zanach (זָנָח) means to reject, spurn, or cast away permanently. Le'olamim (לְעוֹלָמִים) emphasizes perpetual abandonment. This begins a series of seven anguished questions (vv.7-9) that expose faith's darkest doubts. The questions are not rhetorical exercises but genuine wrestling with apparent divine abandonment.

Will he be favourable no more? (כִּאֵן-רָצֶחֶת עַתָּה). Ratsah (רָצֶחֶת) means to be pleased with, to show favor, to accept. The psalmist fears God's permanent withdrawal of covenant affection. These questions echo Israel's recurring complaint: "Has God forgotten?" (Psalms 10:11, 13:1). They also anticipate Christ's desolate cry: "My God, why have you forsaken me?" (Psalm 22:1, Matthew 27:46). Scripture validates asking hard questions in faith's crucible.

Historical Context

The fear of divine rejection haunted Israel's consciousness, especially during exile. Lamentations 3:31-32 answers: "The Lord will not cast off for ever: but though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion." God's covenant promises (Genesis 17:7, 2 Samuel 7:14-16) guaranteed He would not utterly forsake His people, yet circumstances often contradicted this assurance. The tension between promise and experience generates these anguished questions.
