

Psalms 78:35

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer.

Analysis

And they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer. The title tzur (צור, "rock") emphasizes God's stability, protection, and permanence—used 73 times in the Psalms. El Elyon (אֱלֹהֵי עֶלְיוֹן, "high God") denotes supreme sovereignty, first used by Melchizedek (Genesis 14:18-20). Gō'ēl (גֹּאֲלֵךְ, "redeemer") is kinsman-redeemer language, pointing to God's covenant obligation to rescue His people.

Yet Asaph's irony is devastating—they "remembered" only under duress. True memory of God as Rock should produce unwavering trust, but theirs was selective amnesia cured temporarily by catastrophe. They knew the right theology—God as foundation, sovereign, and deliverer—yet this knowledge remained cerebral rather than transformative.

The tragedy intensifies in verse 36: their confession was lip-service. Modern believers face identical danger—orthodox theology without heart transformation, knowing God's attributes while living practically atheistic lives. Christ warned against calling Him "Lord, Lord" without obedience (Matthew 7:21).

Historical Context

Asaph references Israel's deliverance from Egypt, where God demonstrated all three roles: Rock providing stability through covenant, Most High God judging

Egypt's gods, and Redeemer purchasing Israel from slavery. These weren't abstract concepts but lived experiences the Exodus generation witnessed.

Study Questions

1. What "rocks" (false foundations) do you turn to before remembering God is your true Rock?
2. How can you cultivate constant awareness of God as Redeemer, not just crisis-driven remembrance?
3. Does your theology inform your daily trust, or remain compartmentalized head-knowledge?
