

Psalm 81:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Sing aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.

Analysis

Sing aloud unto God our strength—(רְנָנוּ לְאֱלֹהִים עָזֶנוּ) The imperative rannû ('sing aloud, shout for joy') opens this festal psalm with exuberant worship. Our strength (uzzênu) recalls Exodus 15:2 after the Red Sea deliverance, establishing God as Israel's military might and refuge. Make a joyful noise (harî'û) means to raise a battle cry or shout of triumph.

This summons to corporate worship begins Psalm 81, likely composed for the Feast of Trumpets (Rosh Hashanah, v. 3). The dual address—God (Elohim) and God of Jacob—balances universal sovereignty with covenant particularity. Asaph's choir led this celebration, reminding Israel that true strength comes not from military might but from the covenant Lord who fought for them.

Historical Context

Asaph (or his guild) wrote this psalm for temple worship, specifically for the Feast of Trumpets (Leviticus 23:23-25). This fall festival marked the Jewish new year with trumpet blasts, calling Israel to repentance before the Day of Atonement. The historical memory of deliverance from Egypt (vv. 5-7) grounds festal joy in God's past faithfulness.
