

Psalms 81:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels.

Analysis

So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust (וַאֲשַׁלְּחֵהוּ בְּשִׁרְיוֹת לִבָּם)—Ashallechu ('I sent them away, released them') describes judicial abandonment. Bishrerut libbam (in the stubbornness/imagination of their heart) appears in Jeremiah 7:24 and 23:17 as covenant curse. And they walked in their own counsels (yelechu be-mo'atsothem)—choosing self-designed wisdom over divine instruction.

This is God's most terrifying judgment: giving rebels what they demand. Romans 1:24, 26, 28 repeats this pattern: 'God gave them up' to uncleanness, vile affections, and reprobate minds. When people persistently reject God's gracious rule, He eventually grants their request for autonomy—which leads to destruction. The path of self-will always ends in slavery, not freedom.

Historical Context

Israel's judges period illustrates this cycle: rebellion → oppression → cry for help → deliverance → peace → rebellion (Judges 2:11-19). God's judicial abandonment appears in Israel's defeat (Judges 2:14), exile (2 Kings 17:18-23), and ultimate rejection of Messiah. Yet even judgment served redemptive purposes, preparing for the faithful remnant and new covenant.

Study Questions

1. What does it mean for God to 'give people up' to their lusts, and how is this both justice and mercy?
2. How do you discern between God's permissive will (allowing consequences) and His directive will (commanding obedience)?
3. What warning does this verse give about persistently rejecting God's correction and counsel in favor of self-designed religion?
