

Psalms 81:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

This he ordained in Joseph for a testimony, when he went out through the land of Egypt: where I heard a language that I understood not.

Analysis

---

This he ordained in Joseph for a testimony (עֲדוּת בִּיהוֹסֵף שְׁמוֹ)—Edut (testimony, witness) often refers to the tablets of the Law (Exodus 25:16). Joseph here represents the entire nation descended from Jacob, particularly Ephraim (Joseph's son), the leading northern tribe. When he went out through the land of Egypt recalls the Exodus.

Where I heard a language that I understood not—Israel's oppression under Egyptian taskmasters speaking a foreign tongue. The sudden shift to first person ('I heard') may represent the psalmist identifying with Israel's slavery, or it introduces God's direct speech (continuing through v. 16). This festival testimony ensured each generation would know the bitterness of slavery and sweetness of redemption.

Historical Context

Joseph's descent to Egypt (Genesis 37-50) providentially positioned Israel for 430 years in a foreign land (Exodus 12:40-41). The Egyptian language and culture were utterly alien to Hebrew shepherds. The Passover and other festivals were established as perpetual memorials (edut) so Israelites would tell their children 'what the Lord did for me when I came out of Egypt' (Exodus 13:8).

Study Questions

1. How does remembering past seasons of 'Egyptian bondage' (spiritual slavery, pre-conversion life) strengthen present faithfulness?
2. Why does God establish testimonies and memorials rather than trusting each generation to maintain spiritual fervor independently?
3. What 'strange language' (worldly philosophy, cultural pressure) threatens to drown out God's clear voice today?
