

Psalms 81:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee; I answered thee in the secret place of thunder: I proved thee at the waters of Meribah. Selah.

Analysis

Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee (בַּצָּרָה קָרָאתָ וְאֶנִּי הוֹצֵאתִיךָ)—Tsarah (distress, trouble) recalls Israel's groaning under Egyptian oppression (Exodus 2:23-24). Achalletskha ('I rescued you') emphasizes God's powerful intervention. I answered thee in the secret place of thunder (be-seter ra'am)—likely Mount Sinai, where God descended in thunderous glory (Exodus 19:16-19, 20:18).

I proved thee at the waters of Meribah (Exodus 17:1-7, Numbers 20:1-13)—Israel's rebellious testing of God ('Is the Lord among us or not?') despite His proven faithfulness. The tragic irony: God answered their cry, gave them law in thunder, and provided water from rock, yet they still doubted. This pattern of divine faithfulness meeting human faithlessness runs throughout redemptive history.

Historical Context

The exodus narrative progressed from cry (Exodus 2:23) to deliverance (Exodus 14) to covenant (Exodus 19-20) to testing (Exodus 17, Numbers 20). Meribah ('contention') became synonymous with Israel's rebellion, costing Moses the Promised Land. Despite their failure, God's covenant faithfulness never wavered—the water still flowed, the manna still fell.

Study Questions

1. How quickly do you forget God's past deliverances when facing new trials, and how can remembrance combat doubt?
2. What does God's response 'in the secret place of thunder' teach about His transcendence and the awe proper to worship?
3. Why does God 'prove' or test His people after deliverance rather than simply rewarding them with ease?
