

Psalms 89:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

Analysis

For who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? (כִּי מֵבָשְׂטָק יִשְׂרָאֵל) —The rhetorical question demands the answer 'no one.' Shamayim (heaven) contains no being who can be arak (arranged alongside, compared) to Yahweh.

Who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD? (מִן זָמָה) (לִיהְיוֹת בָּנֵי אֱלֹהִים) —The bene elim (sons of gods/mighty ones) are heavenly beings or angels, yet none can be damah (likened, made similar) to Yahweh.

This is radical monotheism in a polytheistic world. While Israel's neighbors worshiped pantheons with competing deities, Israel's God stands alone— incomparable in power, faithfulness, and covenant-keeping. The verse implicitly dismisses any angel worship or elevation of heavenly beings, a theme Paul reinforces in Colossians 2:18. Christ alone shares the divine throne (Hebrews 1:3-4), superior even to angels.

Historical Context

In ancient Near Eastern cosmology, the divine council consisted of multiple gods deliberating together. Israel's psalms subvert this—Yahweh alone is sovereign, and all heavenly 'mighty ones' are His created servants, not rivals. This theological revolution prepared the way for monotheism's universal claim.
