

Psalms 94:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But judgment shall return unto righteousness: and all the upright in heart shall follow it.

Analysis

But judgment shall return unto righteousness (כִּי־עֵדֶיךָ יָשׁוּב מִשְׁפָּט)—Mishpat (justice/judgment) will return (shuv) to tsedeq (righteousness). Currently justice seems divorced from righteousness—the wicked prosper, the righteous suffer. But a great reversal is coming. All the upright in heart shall follow it promises that moral alignment with God's character will prove vindicated.

This prophesies both historical restorations (like post-exilic return) and ultimate eschatological justice. The New Testament locates this in Christ's return when judgment and righteousness kiss (Psalm 85:10). Meanwhile believers live as faithful witnesses to coming vindication.

Historical Context

In ancient Israel's legal system, judges sat at city gates administering justice. When corruption prevailed, judgment departed from righteousness. The psalmist envisions a day when the legal/moral order reflects God's character—ultimately fulfilled in Christ's millennial reign.

Study Questions

1. Where do you see justice divorced from righteousness in contemporary culture—and how does this promise sustain hope?
2. Are you among the 'upright in heart' willing to follow justice even when it's costly now?
3. How does believing in future vindication change how you respond to present injustice?
