

Revelation 18:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double.

Analysis

The command 'Reward her even as she rewarded you' invokes lex talionis—just recompense (Psalm 137:8, Jeremiah 50:29). 'Double unto her double' emphasizes complete retribution, not mathematical exactness. This represents perfect justice—Babylon receives punishment proportionate to her sins. Reformed theology affirms that God's justice is both retributive (punishing sin) and restorative (vindicating victims). The double portion may allude to Isaiah 40:2 or Jeremiah 16:18, where Israel received double for sins. Here, Babylon (representing worldly systems opposing God) faces comprehensive judgment for persecuting saints.

Historical Context

Ancient conquest often involved reciprocal treatment—invaders suffered what they inflicted. Double recompense appeared in Exodus 22:4 (theft restitution). This command, echoing Old Testament judgment oracles against Babylon and other nations, assured persecuted believers that Rome's apparent invincibility would end in just judgment. God's justice, though delayed, would be thorough.

Study Questions

1. How does the promise of just recompense ('double unto her double') satisfy your longing for justice when you see evil apparently prospering?
2. What does this judgment teach about God's perfect memory—He doesn't forget any sin or any suffering of His people?
